Workers' Compensation

Issue 3 Volume 1

A Message from Ramos Law Firm

Who Pays for Your Medical Care?

If your injury happened at work while you were doing your job, all of your related medical bills should be covered under workers' compensation. You will not be required to pay for any deductibles or premiums either. In fact, you will be entitled to mileage reimbursement to and from your doctor's office in most cases.

As long as your injuries are related to your work accident, then one-hundred percent of the medical care should be paid for by the workers' compensation insurance carrier. This also includes prescription medication, physical therapy, surgery, diagnostic scans and films.

The only caveats are that the medical providers where you treat must be approved by the workers' compensation insurance company and the medical care can expire after a period of time. This can get somewhat complicated, and you know the insurance company will fight you every step of the way.

Work comp injuries can be severe and your health is nothing to toy around with. And you don't want to be stuck with thousands of dollars of medical bills. If you are injured at work, you will need a dedicated team of experts working for you as you know the insurance company has one working for them.

What Are Workers' Compensation Benefits?

The Georgia workers' compensation system protects employees who are injured on the job. It is "no-fault" system so the employee does not need to prove the employer caused the accident. As long as the injury arose out of and was in the course of your employment, your accident will be covered under workers' compensation.

Generally, the workers' compensation insurance carrier is responsible to provide adequate, remedial medical care for your work injuries from an approved medical facility. This would include doctors visits, diagnostic scans, physical therapy, medication, and even transportation. In cases of an emergency, a trip to the hospital would also be covered. In addition to medical care, the insurance company is also responsible for providing you income benefits if you are unable to return to work because of your work injury. Unfortunately, the rate of pay will be less than your normal average weekly wage.
